Dear Wesley,

When I got Dasher's letter this morning reporting that he has actually moved I could hardly believe my eyes. He has been writing in terms of a great rush, "removal as soon as possible" and the "5 persons who bought really crushing us + our furniture out" &c. But since you said the moving was to be completed by the middle of August, I thought that his terms were his usual hyperbole + that he was getting an inventory &c. ready well ahead of time. Now I get this incredible news that he has left almost 4 weeks ahead of schedule. What in the world did you do with all the stuff? Do you mean that the house is empty? How can you put 10 roomfuls of furniture into a cottage &c. &c. And why the rush? Why make Dasher live 3 or 4 weeks in a storage depot when he could have stayed in his own spacious surroundings some longer? I just don't get it. Also, of course, I had told the children they were to have one last holiday in Delhi. The few odds & ends that belong to me (bed, trunk &c) I could at least have disposed of. Oh well, I give up.

To-day is Mark's birthday, & it's raining, so I have quite a bit to cope with here, so I guess I'll just go ahead & cope. I expect you have a different type of situation to handle, so you shouldn't waste time reading letters. We wish you luck!

Love,

Evelyn.
